

Statement on reinforced autoclaved aerated concrete

Reinforced autoclaved aerated concrete is a lighter, cheaper alternative to standard concrete that was used mostly in public buildings such as schools and hospitals between the 1950 and 1990s.

Every indication is that reinforced autoclaved aerated concrete was not widely used in housing.

Comprehensive analysis of our asset records confirms reinforced autoclaved aerated concrete was not used in any of our homes.